Enterprising Orangeburg. November 1902.

Isidore Rich,
Russell street, opposite Wanna-maker Drug Co., in the old Wanna-maker stand. Dry goods, clothing, boots and shoes, notions, millinery, dress goods, &c., &c. It takes three million grains of oats or wheat to sow an acre of ground, but if you go to a well regulated dry goods store you'll conclude that the etceteras are countless. For that reason we can't tell you of the many things to be found in this store, and you must look for yourself. We will try to get 'round, as the lame man said at the South Carolina Exposition, but oh, my! it's a job. The domestics we'll pass by—they are standard.
Colored flannelettes, all wool tricots, zibelines, brilliantines, underwear in wool and mixed; cashmere goods, linens, towelings, hosiery, laces, ribbons, perfumery and "jacquards." (We'd better stop, as this last may be some recent foreign arrival, and strangers are always sensitive.) We'll get on the other side, among the parasols, umbrellas, gloves, corsets, veilings, &c., &c.
These endless &c., &c., will upset us. The men's wear is all right.
This is a new, fresh stock, and has been bought to sell. Mr. Rich is no novice in the business. If he gets into dry goods dictionary, you will think he is a-talking French. Be sure to see him. Remember the stand.
